In the last issue of Broadsword magazine we looked towards the impending invasion of Iraq by the so-called 'Coalition' of forces being put together by US President George W. Bush and his eager puppet Prime Minister Tony Blair. Broadsword offered a National Socialist analysis of the background to the war and the forces guiding American foreign policy.

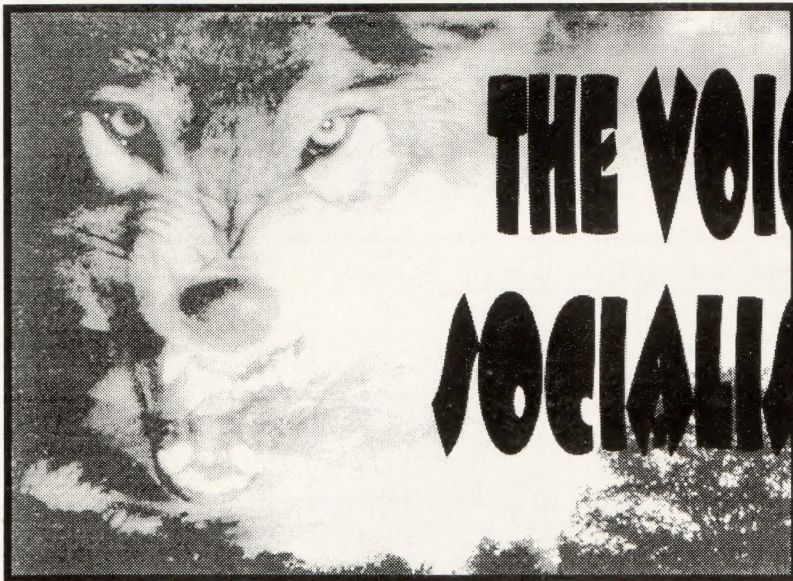

The invasion took place and Iraq is currently in chaos.

The prime motivation for the war was oil and control of Iraq as a strategic landmass in the Middle East. In a move which fooled no-one, the US High Command asked British and Australian forces to seize the oil fields and refineries around Basra, but as soon as the fighting was over American oil industry 'technicians' and security experts moved in to take control of the installations. Then followed the obscene international scramble for contracts in the reconstruction of Iraq. Naturally the biggest and most lucrative contracts had already been granted to major American companies closely linked to the Bush administration and the US Republican Party. British companies hoping for a share of the spoils found themselves getting the second choice of a limited number of options. French, German and Scandinavian companies were pushed out of the running as the Bush government seeks to punish those European states which do not offer unconditional support to the 'New World Order' doctrine of US Imperialism.

As Broadsword goes to press, the war in Iraq is officially over, but fighting continues and the overall situation in Iraq is increasingly uncertain.

Perhaps Iraq was a war too far.

THE VOICE OF NATIONAL SOCIALIST RESISTANCE

THE
COLUMN

In the struggle for a National Socialist revolution in Great Britain, we must not lose sight of the fact that our actions and campaigns are part of a greater struggle, the battle for a National Socialist revival in Europe. Our common struggle stretches from the Atlantic coast of Ireland to the Ural Mountains of Russia, from the Mediterranean shores of Greece to the Arctic Circle territories of Norway and Finland.

Although the different National Socialist Movements of Europe fight under different national flags and carry the differing emblems of their own distinctive NS movements, all are rooted in a common creed. Ideologically, we all share the same origins, however, in each nation our organisations have developed and evolved a variation of National Socialism, which reflects our individual national situations. Although we face different situations in each of our separate countries, we are racial comrades under the skin and share a common cause. Their triumphs are our triumphs, their victories are our victories and their set backs are set backs for us all.

The National Socialist Movements of Europe are a chain of resistance against the many enemies which are ranged against us. Each link in the chain is different; each has its own strengths and unique qualities, each link is vital to Europe's survival. Europe no longer faces the threat of a Communist monolith, but the threat from the Communists and the assorted forces of the extreme-Left still exists in both in Britain and Europe. All nations of Europe are under direct assault from tidal waves of disposed humanity flooding into Britain and Europe from every continent on the planet. The overspill populations of Africa, Asia and South America see our countries as the Promised Land. We must hold back this racial tide before our unique cultures, customs and heritage are totally engulfed in this Third World swarm.

The monolithic forces of International finance and Monopoly Capitalism are an ever present menace and threaten to engulf all our nations in a tidal wave of Trans-Atlantic consumerism and global marketing. The threat of World Government and the New World Order of American banking and geo-politics is an ever present danger, especially when the Zionist grips the tiller of their ship of state.

British Movement has always been committed to the concept of a National Socialist renaissance in Europe and continues to work towards building stronger links with kindred organisations across Europe. At a BM meeting in central England on St. George's Day it was heartening to welcome delegates from Hungary, Greece and Flanders to the hall. At a recent meeting in Antwerp a British Movement delegation was able to cement the BM commitment to the European chain of NS organisations and stood shoulder to shoulder with comrades from Flanders, Germany, France and the Netherlands.

The Werwolf Column is proud of this unity of spirit and calls for closer ties between the Aryan peoples of Europe. Each nation a link in the chain, each link in the chain is a strong bond between the Folk.

Our struggle is world-wide.

Zionist Friends of Israel on Every High Street?

In light of Israel expansionism and aggression in the Palestinian territories, a British based Palestinian support organisation is calling for a boycott of Marks & Spencer stores.

Many British shoppers may not be aware of the Zionist connection to the Marks & Spencer department store chain. Politically the senior management of Marks & Spencer are committed Zionists and economic supporters of the State of Israel.

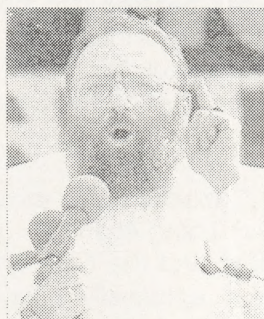

In the 1940's, before the British Mandate in Palestine was withdrawn, senior management of Marks & Spencer supported Zionist settlement of Palestine and advocated ethnic cleansing to clear out the Palestinian Arabs to make room for Jewish immigrants from Europe. In the Jewish Chronicle of September 21st 1941, the M&S Chairman of the time, Israel Sieff demanded that, "Large sections of the Arab population of Palestine should be transported to Iraq and other Middle - Eastern Arab States"

Now in 2003 a London based organisation 'The Friends Of Palestine' is calling for all Anti - Zionists of all political persuasions to boycott Marks & Spencer.

Consider this:

- In 1998 the Israeli Prime Minister, Benjamin Netanyahu, bestowed Israel's highest tribute, the Jubilee Award, on Marks & Spencer.
- In 1999 Lord Marcus Sieff, a Chairman of the Marks & Spencer Board, stated in the companies in-house publication 'The M&S Way' that "Aiding the economic development of Israel is one of its fundamental objectives".
- In 2000 the Israeli Ambassador to Britain honoured the Marks & Spencer company in a ceremony in London. Later an M&S spokesman was reported in the Jewish Chronicle as stating the M&S was, "As close to Israel as we have ever been."
- In June 5th 2000 edition of the Jerusalem Report it announced that M&S supported the Israeli economy with £233 million worth of trade every year.

POLICE CHIEF Breaks the Silence on Immigrant Crime in the UK

May 2003—London

The President of the Association of Chief Police Officers, Chris Fox has broken the official silence on the rising tide of immigrant crime in Britain's towns and cities. Much to the horror of liberal civil servants and the Left-leaning media, Mr. Fox has admitted that "Mass migration has brought with it whole new type of crime, from the Nigerian fraudster and East European who deals in drugs and prostitution to the Jamaican concentration on drug dealing." (For East European read Balkan Muslim, for Balkan Muslim read Albanian and Kosovan.)

The never-ending flood of asylum-seekers and illegal immigrants into Britain fuels a non-British criminal underworld burrowing like termites into British society. The grubby, shifting façade of a multi-cultural society provides a ready cover for an under-class who have already entered the UK illegally, with or without false papers and large immigrant communities who are more than willing to give shelter and security to those who are stateless. It is within the immigrant communities that the illegal immigrant can find a home and work in the 'black economy', if not in restaurants or taxi cabs, then takeaways or sweat shops, low wages and long hours, no taxes no national insurance contributions. Many are straight into criminal activities in some form; Albanian gangs now control Soho's vice industry and also run prostitution in many other British cities. In the past 12 months the police have linked London based Albanian gangs to 70 kidnappings for the purpose of prostitution and a number of inter gang killings. Pakistani and Turkish gangs are in competition for control of the importation and distribution of heroin into Britain, the Pakistanis also run lucrative sidelines in printing and producing forged passports and smuggling illegal immigrants. The Chinese Triads are active in London, Manchester, Liverpool and Glasgow, heavily involved in smuggling illegal immigrants from mainland China as well as illegal gambling, protection rackets in the Chinese business communities and some drug dealing and money laundering as useful sidelines. In recent years the Triads in Britain have developed a flourishing outpost in Ireland, particularly in Dublin.

The most vicious non-British criminals are undoubtedly the 'Yardies', the Jamaican drug gangs active across Britain since the 1980's. The hit-men for most Yardie shootings are brought in from the Caribbean on false papers and submerge into the pubs and clubs of the black communities, especially in cities like Bristol, Birmingham, Leeds, Nottingham and Manchester, the streets of South London have long been battlefields for Yardie shoot outs. Since the early 1990's the Yardies have been behind over 5,000 reported shootings and gun crimes in Britain together with an estimated 500 murders.

Not surprisingly Mr. Fox has come under bitter attack in the media for opening the lid on this aspect of multi-racial Britain. Left-wing politicians, immigrant welfare organisations and refugee support groups have all accused him of "demonising asylum-seekers", one media source angrily denounced his comments as being "at a time of sensitivity around the issue in the wake of electoral gains by the far-right British National Party."

What they really mean is do not mention or criticise the ethnic minorities or asylum seekers because the real British people might just waken up to what is happening to their country and decide to do something about it. They just might realise that in a multi-cultural society this kind of criminality is just the beginning and part of Britain's new reality.

London by name, London by Nature: Broadsword's 'street editor' Ed London gets out into town to look at the capital's latest stories.

MORE JOYS OF LIFE IN MULTI-CULTURAL LONDON

Another issue of Broadsword and another example of how the ethnic minorities are 'enriching' our British culture. For this episode, we need look no further than Southall and the enterprising Asian lads nick-named, 'The Fiat Bravo Boys'.

In just three years Sukhdev Bassi and his brother Rajinder, built up one of the most lucrative heroin distribution businesses in the country. In a truly multi-cultural style, the Bassi brothers did not confine their activities to their own Sikh community, but embraced other ethnic minority members into their gang, buying their heroin in bulk from Turkish gangs in North London and hiring Jamaican 'Yardies' as enforcers to eliminate their rivals. The Bassi brothers ran a ruthless but efficient business, shooting and bombing those that crossed them. In November 2001, it was their gang that lobbed a nail bomb into the Lady Margaret pub in Southall.

Unfortunately, for the Bassi brothers, the Metropolitan Police did not appreciate their business venture and they were arrested in February 2002. The Met closed down the 'Fiat Bravo Boys' just as they were distributing £2.5 million worth of heroin around London.

So in May 2003, the Bassi brother and the rest of the 'Fiat Bravo Boys' faced British justice at the Old Bailey. The charges ranged from trafficking in Class A drugs to possession of illegal firearms and ammunition, to money laundering. Gang member Jagde Kallha was sentenced for both firearms offences and possession of an explosive device.

Unfortunately for the Met, they did not seize the gang's considerable finances. According to the reports in the 'Evening Standard', most of the money was smuggled out of Britain to the Punjab, into the safe care of the families 'back home'.

Once again it is good to see how these people contribute to the British economy and enrich our culture.

On the other side of multi-cultural London is the overwhelming burden on our health services the never ending tide of refugees, asylum seekers and illegal immigrants bring in a whole range of diseases which 'enrich' our culture and swamp our hospitals and clinics.

Check this out - an NHS Consultant recently stated that:

"Two thirds of our new HIV patients are from abroad.

We're shelling out huge amounts of money..... It's why your granny may not get her hip replacement"

This flood of HIV patients is directly attributed to the influx of 'new patients' arriving in Britain from Sub-Sahara Africa, the Far East and India. In addition, other sexually transmitted diseases are rocketing. Cases of syphilis have gone up 500 per cent in six years.

Also diseases like polio and TB, almost eradicated from Britain in the 1950's are making a huge come back, often in new drug-resistant strains which have developed in exotic climates.

When someone suggested that all foreigners coming into Britain from countries where HIV and AIDS are rife should be screened, there was an uproar from the multi-racialists. The head of the Commission for Racial Equality, Trevor Phillips (a close political collaborator of Prime Minister Tony Blair and London Mayor Ken Livingstone), declared, "Every patient should be treated equally. I can't imagine that any British doctor would suggest that patient should be treated differently based on their origins"

Sentence Pronounced on Skinhead Gang Members

Sentence has been passed on skinheads who murdered a Bangladeshi student in March 2002. A federal judge of the Leninski district in the Russian city of Ivanovo, Olga Mutovkina passed a sentence of guilty on six members of the Skinhead group who had slaughtered foreign students in the centre of the city on March 10, 2002.

This time the court has made much progress. All six convictions were real, not suspended and imprisoned (a man was killed, and although it may sound strange, but a suspended sentence was even suggested during the investigation of the crime). It is important that the court emphasised the crime had been committed because of 'national and racial hatred or animosity', the crime wasn't just ordinary hooliganism and causing deliberate health damage. Six teenagers belonging to skinhead group stood a trial for committing crimes, they openly admitted their extreme nationalist views. Within a period when the boys committed their crimes, all of them were ages 15-16. One boy had a swastika tattooed on his body. Nationalistic literature was withdrawn from one boy during searches. During a preliminary investigation and being already at court the boys didn't repent, didn't acknowledge their guilt or come round to a different view. Judging by all the characteristics the criminal are undisguised Russian Fascists.

On March 10 2002, about 5:00pm, a group of 15-20 teenagers cruelly beat up a student from India. The teenagers stood in a circle in the centre of which the Indian was lying on the ground; the poor guy was severely kicked.

Within half an hour after the incident, two more student from Bangladesh who studied in Ivanovo were also severely beaten very close to the Prosecutor's Office of Ivanovo's Leninski district. On May 6 2002, one of them died of grave injuries in a regional hospital. Six teenagers participating in the beating were detained on the same day, but soon released after they gave a written undertaking not to leave the city. A separate criminal case was started with respect to the rest of the detained criminals.

The same day, the skinheads gathered for a birthday celebration in a bar called Pogrebok, the place haunted by the skinheads of Ivanovo. It was the bar where the skinheads were allowed to play their own records of heavy metal music, the guys were shouting "Heil" (as one of the attorneys said at court, the guys were hailing the popular Russian music group Hi-Fi. This is a rather incredible explanation because the group was playing music that as nothing to do with heavy metal).

It is sad statistics, but the beating of foreign students near the city's Fredrick Engels Avenue was treated as something common a year ago. Beatings were always organised by groups of 10-20 skinheads. The direction of institutes of higher education complained about severe beating of foreign students to the city department for internal affairs. Unfortunately, the law enforcement authorities took some preventive and restrictive measures only when one of the beaten foreign students died.

When criminal proceedings were instituted because of the beatings, the Prosecutor of the Ivanovo region Nikolay Gamzin ordered the head of the federal security department of the region to consider activity of Ivanovo skinheads from the point of view of political extremism.

One shouldn't over estimate the danger of fascist and extremely nationalist groups in Russia. The Russian people themselves have always considered themselves to be the bearer of a Messiah role. It is not typical of Russians to conquer territories and subordinate other people; they always involve people in their orbit. It is believed here that the Empire cannot emerge and exist with a prevailing extreme nationalist idea. Even if such a state has strong military power, it will inevitably contract to its original size (Germany may serve as an example in this case). Religious, racial and national tolerance on a level beyond the everyday one is typical of Russians; that is why fascism will never be a real threat to the society and to the state here.

However, the above mentioned explanation cannot excuse the inertness of authorities in those cases when crimes were committed because of national or racial motives. Crimes of this kind are treated as especially dangerous all over the world. Instances of racial or national intolerance even when no serious damage is caused to people, are severely punished in other countries. However, the situation is quite different in Russia.....

.....It is very seldom that national and racial hatred is admitted as the motive of a crime. It cannot be ruled out that the problem of foreign students getting beaten in the city of Ivanovo would still be ignored if it hadn't been the case that one of the victims died. If none of the foreigners died, the skinheads could probably beat even a hundred foreign students in front of witnesses. At that, the criminals would get a suspended sentence.

Russian people treat the nationality problem rather pragmatically and even arrogantly sometimes. But Russia's law enforcement and judicial systems demonstrate in this case those vulgar feelings that are typical of degenerating nations, not of Russians. When the sentence was pronounced on the teenager criminals and it was clear that none of them would have to serve sentences in prison, the skinheads and their families looked rather amazed. Nobody expected that the boys would be taken to prison for the crime, they hoped to get off with a suspended sentence. The 6 skinheads who had cruelly beaten three foreign students in Ivanovo (one of them dies of grave injuries) were sentenced to imprisonment of 1.5 to 5 years in a penitentiary for young criminals.

GERMANY'S FORGOTTEN ANNIVERSARY

Outside Germany few people will realise that June 2003 is the 50th Anniversary of one of the saddest and bloodiest episodes in post - 1945 German history. The summer of 1953 saw a brave, desperate unarmed uprising by East German civilians against Communist oppression which was ruthlessly crushed by the tanks of the Red Army.

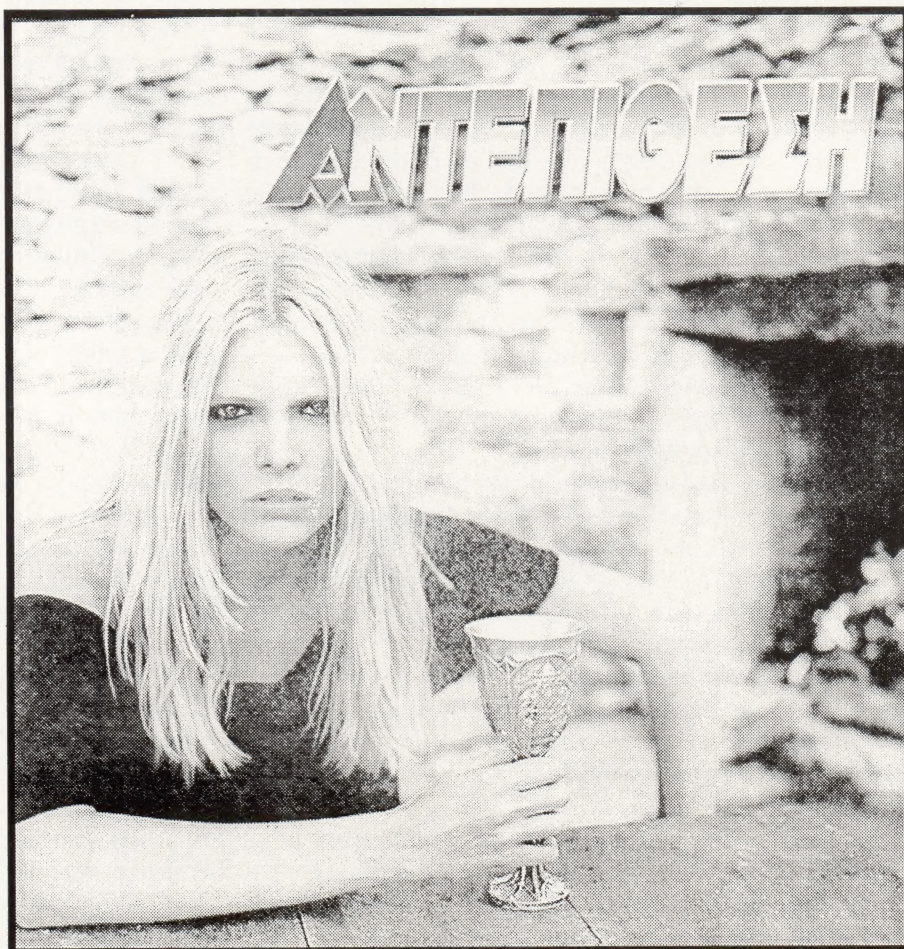

In 1953 East Germany was controlled by the forces of the Soviet Union, Germany was a divided nation partitioned by the Allied powers in 1945, and East Germany was a Communist puppet state. On the 17th of June 1953 hundreds of thousands of East Germans took to the streets to protest against the stranglehold of the Communist government. Looking to the western powers for support, masses of East German workers went on strike to protest against Soviet imposed work quotas, better living conditions and free elections. The protests and demonstrations increased against Soviet plans to abolish the churches and increase work quotas by 10%. Their appeals to Britain, France and the USA fell on deaf ears and the Communist East German authorities turned to their Soviet masters for help. Red Army tanks drove into Berlin and other cities, the Soviet military commander declared martial law and a state of emergency.

More than 50 people were killed when unarmed workers confronted Red Army units on the streets. 20 more were executed by firing squads and over 1,000 were imprisoned by Communist courts on the charge of 'taking part in an attempted fascist coup'. This sad anniversary shows how western governments looked the other way as the Red Army crushed any opposition to Communist control.

It is an anniversary that should not be forgotten.

Right:- The Aryan Image of Modern National Socialism.

Europe wide there is a National Socialist renaissance taking place, the picture shown here comes from the magazine of the Greek NS organisation The Golden Dawn, but could have been taken from any current NS publication from the Danube to Dublin, from Finland to the Black Sea, Europe is stirring to the return of the great idea:- National Socialism.

NEW LABOUR

A Party of Connoisseurs & Epicureans Expensive Taste Catered for by the Public Purse

Upper class tastes in décor and furniture are the trade mark of Britain's ruling elite, not the aristocracy or millionaire capitalists, but the self styled champions of the working class, Tony Blair's New Labour Government. Blair has surrounded himself with a coterie of middle class 'wanna-bees' and upper class lawyers who treat the Treasury as a gravy train on which to indulge their personal tastes for luxury.

In the first five years of Tony Blair's Government extravagant spending on decorating and kitting out government offices and official buildings almost doubled to a point where in 2002 it was estimated that the cost was running at £102 million per year. Between May 1997 and May 2002, the Labour Government spent over £350 million on decorating and furnishing ministerial and civil service offices and buildings. The biggest spender amongst the Labour hierarchy was the Lord Chancellor - Lord Derry Irvine who came to public attention in 2001 when he spent an astonishing £650,000 on refurbishing his official apartments at Westminster. The outrageous purchases included luxury Pugin wallpaper at £350 per roll, £14,000 for an antique dining table and £3,000 for new lavatory. Lord Irvine, who is noted for his expensive tastes in all things, is a personal friend and favourite of the Prime Minister, Tony Blair, and saw no problem in the cost of this personal grandeur. Since the outcry over the purchases for his offices and apartments, the Lord Chancellor has been a little less public in revealing his tastes, but the spending continues. By the end of 2002, his department had spent over £95 million on such projects since Labour took power in May 1997.

Before she controversially quit the Cabinet in 2003, Clare Short had increased the spending on her Department for International Development almost ten-fold, rising to nearly £25 million by the time she quit. However, this £25 million was not spent on Prestige projects for the Third World as one might expect, the bulk of the figure went on building and fitting out the department's show-piece new headquarters at Palace Street.

In almost every government department under New Labour the cost of decoration and furnishings in official buildings has rocketed. While money for schools and hospitals has trickled out of the Treasury, money for both Government and Civil Service offices has flooded out. Many of Blair's key ministers are noted for their expensive tastes in furniture and paintings, elaborate architecture and state of the art office equipment. Government spending on flattering the vanity of

New Labour's political 'aristocracy' knows no bounds and it is the British tax payer who foots the bill.

BUT THE LABOUR PARTY ITSELF IS IN FINANCIAL TROUBLE

By the beginning of this year, 2003, the mighty Labour Party was in serious financial difficulties, running an operating deficit of over £9 million per year and a £5 million mortgage on their new London head office in Old Queen Street.

The Labour Party general secretary, David Triesman, has always been keen to play down the level of Labour Party debt and struggled to explain why over 30 Labour Party staff were made redundant in 2002. The reality of New Labour is that traditional working-class support is falling away. Membership is in steep decline as people are increasingly disillusioned by Tony Blair's presidential style of government and his slavish following of US President George W Bush into war with Iraq.

Donations to New Labour from private sources are drying up, except from the likes of millionaire supporters like Lord Levy, and the Trade Unions are increasingly unhappy about providing funds to support the Blair political machine. In fact, in summer 2002, the Labour Party was forced to beg an advance of £100,000 million from the Trade Unions just to meet its bills and to pay the wages of Labour Party staff.

If Blair's New Labour was a business, it would look towards bankruptcy.

For Holland & For Europe

The Life & Death of Dr. M.M. Rost Van Tonningen

What is the point of speaking about the past? Why take another look at the worldview of my late husband? Is there any point in speaking about such things in the liberal democratic era in which we live today? My answer is that there most certainly is, for it is only through an open-mindedness toward the past that we can understand the road to the future.

M.M. Rost van Tonningen and I were married on December 21 1940. Reichsführer-SS Heinrich Himmler was our best man. Our matrimonial vow echoed the SS. Oath: "Our honor is loyalty".

Before the end came for the German Reich, my husband and I were given the chance to escape to Brazil. He refused, determined to see things through to the end and ready to take responsibility for his acts. Finally granted his wish, he took up arms as a member of the Dutch Waffen-SS. Although my husband had let me decide for myself whether I should flee with our two children to South America, I naturally declined. With the birth of my third child imminent, I made a perilous escape from advancing Polish troops across lands that the Germans had largely flooded to hinder the Allies' progress. A German ship then brought me to the island of Terschelling, in West Frisia, far from the front. There, in a small room, unaided and alone, I brought my third child into the world, hale and hardy. My husband was never to learn of the birth of this son. Soon the people of the village knew, however. My child's arrival was entered into the local register of births and, following the local custom, the town crier, after blowing on his great horn, proclaimed that the new-born child was the son of Rost van Tonningen. My husband was well known: his name adorned every Dutch bank note. The frenzied crowds, discovering that the wife of a notorious 'collaborator' was in their midst, dragged my children and me from our room and would surely have lynched us had not the ship's doctor of the German vessel which brought me to the island happened by in his car just then. Driving into the crowd, he pulled us into the car and drove off at high speed.

Since the Kriegsmarine had capitulated, there was no chance of escaping on the ship that had brought me to Terschelling: like the rest of the German warships in the harbour, it was under embargo. Even my brave rescuer believed there was no hope for me, and offered me a poison capsule. There was, however, one German vessel at anchor there that hadn't been seized, for it wasn't a warship. I begged the captain to help my children and me escape. Without wasting any words he weighed anchor and we sailed off into the North Sea, negotiating dangerous minefields until we reached Cuxhaven, at the mouth of the Elbe. I was eager to reach Germany because I believed, following the death of Adolf Hitler on April 30, that the Allies might cease hostilities against the Reich and march against the Red Army, together with the remaining Waffen-SS formations. Himmler had transmitted just such a proposal, through Count Bernadotte, to the British and Americans, and my husband, close to the Reichsführer's circle, had gotten wind of it. Like my children, I was half-dead with hunger and fatigue, but I still hoped that I would meet my husband somewhere in Germany. That was not to be, however. As I was to learn later M.M. Rost van Tonningen died brutally at the hands of his captors.

Shortly after arriving at Cuxhaven, where my children and I were admitted to the hospital, I learned that I was about to be arrested and extradited by the British. With the help of a nurse I escaped and, fleeing by foot with my children along country roads, made my way to Goslar in the Harz Mountains, where I was reunited with my family. After a few days, however, I was arrested by the British and returned to the Netherlands. At first I was kept prisoner in the subterranean dungeons of Ft. Honswijk, where I endured terrible treatment from the embittered and vengeful so-called Dutch "democrats". After my release, I was able to locate and regain custody of my three sons, but all our property had been confiscated. It was only then that I learned something of my husband's fate.

In April 1945 M.M. Rost van Tonningen was captured by Canadian troops during the Allied invasion of the Netherlands. At first he was held, together with other Dutch SS officers, at a concentration camp in Elst. Following a visit by Prince Berhart, consort of Princess Juliana, my husband was transferred to Utrecht and then, on May 24, to a jail in Schveningen, near the Hague. Thirteen days later, on June 6, 1945, he was murdered there by his captors. I never received official notice of my husband's death, which authorities later claimed was a suicide. They have never produced any evidence to support this claim: the records pertaining to my husband have been sealed until the year 2069. I was presented, however, with a bill from the municipal sanitation service of The Hague, because his remains were transferred, first from the prison to a hospital and then to a cemetery, in a garbage truck. It was given to me by a policeman named Gross, who carried a dossier with gruesome details of my husband's mistreatment.

When I visited the hospital to which my husband had been taken, the physician-in-charge was badly shaken when he learned who I was. When I asked him about my husband's death, he stammered, "No, no, Mrs. Rost Van Tonningen, I can't talk about it." Then he took off his white coat and led me out of the hospital, where he hailed a taxi and directed me to the Cemetery. When I arrived there, it was the same story. The director was frightened, for he had been told to say nothing regarding my husband. He simply pointed to a row of portfolios, labelled "Secret," on a shelf, and told me that one of them told the story of my husband's death, of which he could say nothing more. Then he showed me the grave, a mass grave set aside for paupers, into which my husband's body, without coffin, had been tossed. Although I tried for years to obtain permission to re-inter my husband in our family plot, I was unsuccessful. My request was taken under consideration by the Council of State, which procrastinated for some time before informing me that the grave had been cleared.

Since my release from prison I have worked tirelessly to establish the truth about my husband's death, of which I learned in my captivity. Due to the refusal of the allegedly "humane" and "democratic" regime that the Allies restored in the Netherlands, I have so far been able to learn very little. In 1950, which had been proclaimed a Holy Year by Pope Pius XII, I visited the Pope in Rome. He was aware of the mistreatment and murder of my husband, and he promised to help me. On my return to Holland, I visited the papal nuncio in order to obtain a document concerning my husband's death. I was unsuccessful, however, because the Minister of Justice, a Catholic who was cooperating with the nuncio, was suddenly transferred to the West Indies, where he was appointed governor. His successor, who was Jewish, was not friendly to my case. My attempts to present my case to the International Court of Justice at The Hague were similarly frustrated.

I was forced to make a living for my family and myself, not an easy thing for the widow of a prominent National-Socialist in post war Holland. Before the war I had studied biology under the great ethologist Konrad Lorenz, and my studies had brought me to China and the Dutch East Indies. Like other "collaborators" however, I was excluded from work in my own field. At first I tried to support my sons by painting lampshades. No sooner had my persecutors learned of this than the rumour was spread that these lampshades were made of human skin (the same lie that was spread about Ilse Koch). I had to give up that enterprise. Thereafter I started an electrical equipment business. Trained as a biologist, I made myself into a businesswoman and technical expert. Beginning with 100 Guilders, over the course of 34 years, I built up my business to a factory employing 25 men.

When I reached seventy years of age, I fell ill, and required two operations. My sons were not interested in taking over the factory, and during my convalescence some of my enemies were able through various tricks to gain control of my business. During the following years I received over one hundred bomb threats, and my windows were smashed many times. The press stepped up its campaign against me as well. Since my husband had been a member of the Dutch parliament, I am entitled by law to a small pension. In 1984 a Dutch magazine discovered this, and the professional "anti-Fascists" succeeded in pressuring parliament to hold a hearing on whether my pension should be cancelled. So far they have been unsuccessful. Nevertheless, I became something of a judicial "muscle-meter," called "the Black Widow", on whom litigants and lawyers can try their strength. After my periodical Manuscripten published a picture of a woman in the costume of a fisherman's wife, I was astounded to receive a letter from a lawyer demanding 50,000 Guilders for his client, an actress. Since we had quite unawares used her picture without obtaining permission, I was eventually forced to pay her 2,500 Guilders, as well as assume the costs of the lawsuit, an additional 10,000 Guilders. Police looking for allegedly anti-Jewish literature twice searched my home. On their first search they found a brochure that questioned the factuality of the Holocaust. The court decided that to challenge the Holocaust was anti-Jewish, and I received a three-month suspended sentence. The second search resulted in the police confiscating Hitler's Mein Kampf and The Great Holocaust Trial. I was subsequently convicted of possessing these forbidden books.

In my life I have experienced many high points, as well as the low points. I have tried to be equal to each situation, always attempting to live in accordance with the spiritual basis of life, the mission that is given each of us to carry out on the earthly plane. The life of each of us is merely a thread in the larger fabric or plan. I still count our meetings with Adolf Hitler as highlights in my life. For us he was a leader who dedicated and sacrificed himself for his people; one who eminently fulfilled his life's mission. He united his countrymen, of all classes and stations, from the aristocracy to the farmers and labourers, as had no man before him.

His soldiers fought heroically to the last, particularly the men of the Waffen-SS, not only Germans but from across Europe. Like my beloved brother - who died in combat in the ranks of the SS - and my husband, I think of Adolf Hitler as the First European. At the end of the war, my husband refused to abdicate his responsibilities or abandon his people. He stayed and fought honourably, only to be butchered. Why? I believe not merely because Rost Van Tonningen was a Dutch National Socialist, but because he knew too much about those of his countrymen who cooperated with the Germans in the beginning, then went over to the Allies as Dutch patriots, "heroes of the resistance", and the like. Had my husband stood trial, his defence might have proved embarrassing for many Dutchmen in high places.

The BMW has chosen the date of June 6th as the commemoration date of the survival and endurance of those N.S. women, past, present and future. This is the date when one N.S. woman began her struggle alone, and the date is in her honour and as tribute to her tireless work. "For Frau Rost van Tonningen", we women salute you.

UNIDENTIFIABLE BRITISH YOUTH

I, as a National Socialist young woman am afraid to say that I am embarrassed and ashamed of the White British youth today.

The music charts and television are pumped full of manufactured brainwashed youth aging between 16 - 25 who are happy to swap a British identity for that of an American influenced 'hip hop' culture. For example, Saturday morning television shows, directed at keeping our children amused out of school hours, are rife with young performers who seem to have forgotten that they are White Britons. Instead of showing people bringing forth the 'Proud to be British' message to make our young folk aware of our own heritage and culture all I see is young performers (especially from the music scene) who are trying to adopt a black, Americanised persona.

The blow is particularly hard to bear when I see white youths, their heads wrapped in bandanas, wearing baggy clothes with medallions around their necks, singing songs of 'hip hop' orientation and rapping slogans about guns, drugs and money. Their music videos depict vast multi-million estates, expensive cars and a generally high class social life - surely thus sending our children the message that success and popularity only comes as a product of being extremely wealthy. It seems capitalism is continually being forced down our necks without us even realising.

Did our heroic forefathers fight to preserve our country's freedom and heritage for nothing? If our youth were more adequately educated about our origins as White Britons and our inspirational and truly remarkable folklore and culture; would they so readily disregard their own history only to adopt another country's culture? One that is soaked through with gun crime, violence and drug abuse? After all, has America got any history and heritage of its own? The answer is no; in order to make history they must create it themselves.

My message is this:- PARENTS AWAKE!!! Take the time to educate your children in those spare moments at the weekend instead of letting them watch their Saturday morning programmes. They are our future, so we must plant the seeds now so that their children and their children's children can reap the fruit from the harvest of our knowledge.

We must pick up the sword and continue the battle for a New Dawn as our ancestors did so courageously for us. Only then will our youth grasp and work towards a National Socialist future for Britain.

OUR ANCESTORS

The Celts Part Two

BRITON - A dictionary definition.

One of the people living in Southern Britain before the Roman conquest; native or inhabitant of Great Britain (Concise Oxford English Dictionary)

A senior British Movement organiser recently commented that one thing that really made him angry was the way certain sections of the media referred to non-White British passport holders as 'Britons'. In particular, this reference was being made to the two British-born Asians who had acted as suicide bombers in Israel in Spring 2003. The press repeatedly referred to them as 'Britons' or 'British', which obviously, they were not. These two were British by bits of paper and legislative slight of hand, they were not British by race, culture, heritage or ancestry.

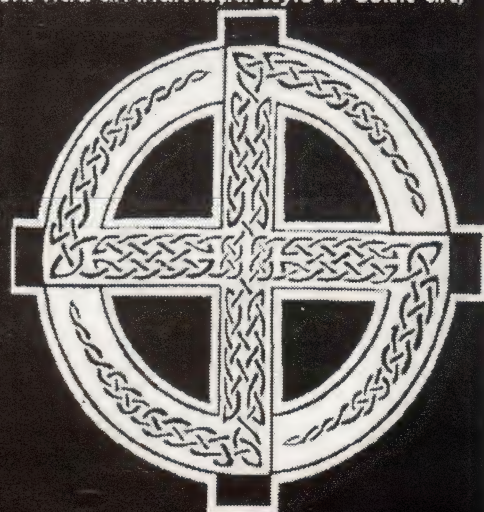

As the dictionary defines them, the original Britons were the descendants of the Stone Age and Bronze Age peoples of pre-history who had migrated across the mainland of Europe into the Atlantic coastal lands which would become Britain and Ireland after the Ice Age. In those ancient times, Britain and Ireland were on one land mass joined to the rest of Europe by a lowland corridor which was flooded by the rising seas over 10,000 years ago creating the English Channel and the Irish Sea.

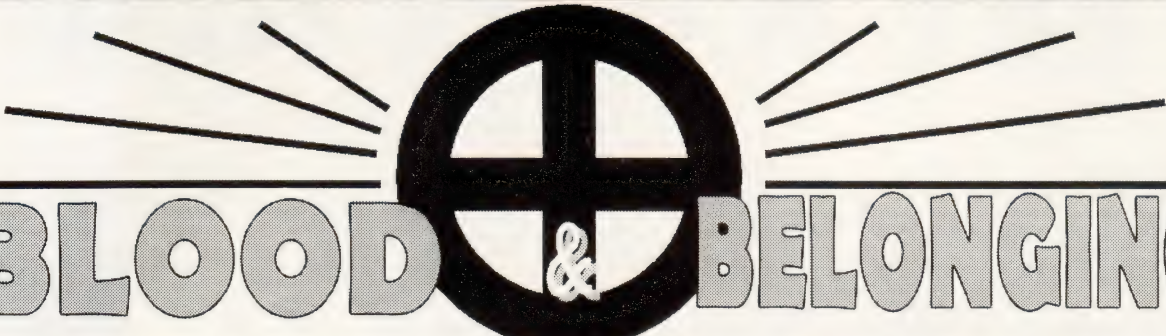

These people were the ancestors of the British and Irish Celts, who were part of the great tribal network of Celtic peoples who dominated western and central Europe for over 500 years throughout the period known as the Iron Age. The Celt's grip on Europe was broken by the Armies of Imperial Rome, but their culture, art and language has survived in the Atlantic fringes of their former territories down to present day.

The Britons were a creative and intelligent people, not the hairy, illiterate barbarians of Victorian imagination, but highly organised and cultured people with intricate social structures, a complex tribal and religious system which supported imaginative artists and craftsmen. The British and Irish Celts were constantly trading with each other and there was regular cross Channel trading with mainland Europe. There were periods of mass migration into Britain by the tribes of western Celts, bringing new influences on language, art and technology.

The Britons became a trading and farming nation and were highly organised, by the time Romans came to Britain in 43AD, the tribes of Southern Britain were exporting grain, wool and iron to Gaul (modern France) and the Belgic tribes (modern Belgium and the Netherlands). The Britons had an individual style of Celtic art, language and culture, different and distinct from the sophisticated and expansionist tribes of Celtic Europe. The Britons shared the European Celts love of horses and skills in horsemanship, their warriors were fierce and brave with a code of honour and chivalry on the battlefield. Above all, the Celts were a proud and intelligent people who recorded the history and heritage of their nations in poetry and in song. There was an oral tradition, handed down by spoken words and memorised by Druids and Bards. Only at the end of the Iron Age were the Celts developing a written system, the mysterious Ogham script.

These people were the Britons, ancestors of the British and there is no way on earth that any person not born of White Western European stock can ever claim to be British, much less a Briton.

BLOOD & BELONGING

National Socialism and the Green Revolution By Rohan Redbeard

Today in Britain no other symbol seems more potent of the very corruption and decadence of modern life than the example of the cities. The significant high rates of youth suicide, homelessness and drug addiction all bear witness to the discontent of a people divorced from any real contact with their natural surroundings - the countryside - as opposed to the concrete world of tower blocks and the grey uniformity of modern architecture.

Before the advent of urbanisation and the coming of the machine, it was the land that sustained the lives of our Aryan forefathers. Working the land, drawing forth the harvest of their labour. Surrounded by the very spiritual essence of Nature from which sprang the beauty of an imaginative and inspirational British folklore and culture. Their small rural villages were thus closely-knit communities which possessed the strength of self-reliance and co-operation.

However, it would be grossly inaccurate to assert that in these times life was without hardship, for hardship was inevitably the epitome of rural life. Indeed, the spectre of famine lurked all around. But it was the strength of kinship, the ties of blood that sustained family life. All co-operating and all sharing for the common good of all - proto-National Socialism in practice.

LAND FOR THE PEOPLE

Nothing seems more symbolic than the enduring struggles of our ancestors to escape from the often grinding poverty than the poetic figure of the humble and honest peasant, his plough gripped in hand turning the earth in hope that the soil would yield once again prosperity.

Eventually, over centuries of life on the land the peasantry began to dwindle; in part due to their small holdings having been swallowed up by the large estates of rich landed families and by the growing urbanisation of the countryside due to the encroachments of industrial capitalism. The mass exodus from the land was therefore set in motion. Today, the horrendous effects of that exodus are all about us. The peasantry has been replaced by the proletariat; a class of rootless, propertyless and financially insecure people left prey to all manner of exploitation and ruthless city capitalists.

The precedent of the age of our folk and future must consequently be a reversal of this disastrous trend. Land presently held by multinational corporations, by banks and other absentee parasites must be broken up and given over in the form of small holdings to British families willing to make use of it in the process of nourishing foodstuffs for the folk community. Only organic husbandry and natural methods should be permitted as it has been conclusively shown that the techniques of modern intensive farming with its excessive use of pesticides, artificial fertilizers and other chemical applications are harmful; not only to the soil but to humans who daily consume the products of agri-business.

BRITISH BLOOD AND SOIL

The National Socialist revolution in Britain for which we in the British Movement are working to build will gradually end the drift from the land to provide the essential catalyst for a phased and prolonged movement back to the land, revitalising rural village community life and reviving traditional British crafts for too long left in ruinous decay.

Hand in hand with these proposals for a truly organic society must advance the establishment of a new education imbued with the National Socialist philosophy of 'Blood and Soil'. For such an education system will be of vital importance in the vocational teaching of our young folk the methods of land cultivation, reforestation of hedgerows and windbreaks and the age old craft of dry stone walling. What better way to rekindle the flame of British racial pride, to awaken the latent and noble ideas that folk and homeland than in the participation of such healthy, wholesome and patriotic activities whereby British youth are at one with the soil of their homeland.

For a genuine and prosperous society of free British farmers to become an eventual living reality, there must be a desire within the hearts and minds of our fellow Britons to once again live and work on the land as our forefathers did. The priority of the present must be the realisation of that inherently life springs from the soil and that there must be a resurgence of the instinctive will needed for our people to cast off the shackles of multiculturalism and grasping materialism. To embrace the everlasting values of folk and soil are to live by Nature's Eternal Laws.

THE WAR IN IRAQ

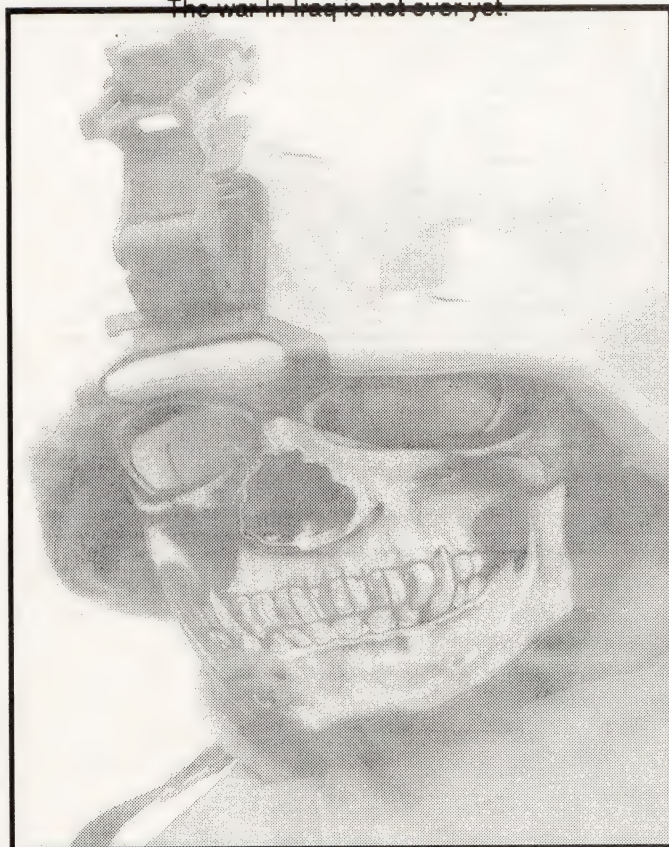

Is it Really Over?

In the last issue of Broadsword (issue No.25), we discussed the implications of the pending war with Iraq, the background and political double - dealing by the American and British Governments, possible outcomes and likely consequences. As predicted, the invasion of Iraq went ahead and, as predicted, the situation is far from resolved. Equally predictable was the grubby scramble for contracts in the future reconstruction of Iraq and equally predictable doling out of the largest share of billion dollar contracts to American corporations; particularly those with strong connections to the Bush administration.

In a piece of theatre which should've fooled nobody during the invasion, the American forces specifically requested that British and Australian forces seized the Iraqi oilfields around Basra and the southern peninsula oil refineries and tanker terminals to 'prove' that the United States did not want Iraq's oil. But as soon as the major hostilities ended, the American oil experts moved in to ensure that their 'technical expertise' was on hand when the oil began to flow again and that control of Iraqi oil was under American scrutiny.

Despite US President George W. Bush's announcement in May that the war in Iraq was over, the conflict has continued on a lower scale, with regular fire-fights and ambushes. As Broadsword goes to press in June 2003, news is coming through of continued Iraqi attacks against both British and American forces, six British military policemen being killed in one incident. Since the official declaration of ceasefire in May 2003, an average of two American service personnel per day have been killed in action in Iraq.

The war in Iraq is not over yet.

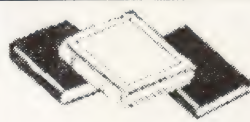

Meanwhile on the home front..... Iraqi asylum seekers and refugees create problems in the UK.

At the end of June 2003 there have been two nights of rioting in Wrexham, North Wales. The disturbances have been centred around the presence of a couple of hundred Iraqi asylum seekers and refugees in the small border town. The media and the authorities have, as usual, tried to play down the situation in Wrexham and as usual, the local community have been branded intolerant racists. According to the press reports, the violence was centred around the Caia Park Estate. The trouble began on the night of 22nd June, when local residents fought running battles with groups of Iraqi Kurds; the local police broke up the fights in a few hours. On Monday night, more serious fighting flared up around the Red Dragon pub as 200 or more local youths fought police in riot gear (allegedly no Iraqis were present) and police reinforcements were brought in from Liverpool to finally close the situation down.

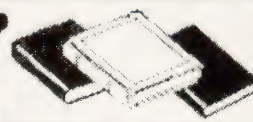

The truth is as usual somewhat different.

According to a British Movement supporter in North Wales, the reality of the Wrexham disturbances is this: blocks of flats have been turned over to Iraqi Kurdish asylum seekers, most whom are young males. The local authorities have as usual pulled out all the stops to provide the new comers with furniture, TV sets, washing machines etc and have put extra resource into getting many of the Iraqis into paid work. As is typical in such small town housing estates, the majority of local people are on low incomes or unemployed and do not qualify for all the help and free handouts which the asylum seekers are given. The trouble has resulted from two main causes; firstly the Iraqis frequently accosted local women, requesting sexual favours in the crudest terms; and some of the unemployed males shout obscenities at the local Wrexham women as they walk past the Iraqi blocks of flats. Those Iraqi who are working have aggravated local unemployed men by driving past in cars provided by the local social services, taunting locals that they have jobs and money but the locals do not.

The situation on Sunday night erupted after a local woman was sworn and spat at by some Iraqis and her husband went across to the flats and punished the offenders. The Iraqis responded by going mob-handed to the Red Dragon pub later that evening and attacked those in that bar with iron bars and baseball bats, the pub was wrecked. Local anger boiled over and fights erupted around the flats on the estate as the Wrexham people took revenge on the Iraqis, the police eventually restored order to the estate. Throughout the Monday following, local hostility to the Iraqis grew and groups of local youths turned on TV crew who had gathered in the area and were apparently siding with the asylum seekers against the locals, local grievances were dismissed as 'racist comments'. Local anger again boiled over but this time police came in larger numbers to force the locals away from the asylum seeker's residences and the local council whisked away the Iraqis to secure accommodation prior to being re-housed in Wrexham.

OUR READERS SAY

Dear Sirs / Madam,

I was glad to find your postal address on the net, and so thought I'd find out if you could send me any info concerning the BM of the 1990's /2000's. I would be grateful for any info you could send me as, having been out of touch with racial regards for some time now, any updates about local meetings, activity days etc All the above would be most welcome.

I was an active member of the National Front for some years, before my liberty was denied for related matters, and feel I can be an asset to you. I feel strongly about Racial matters and as history proves, I am willing to go to extreme lengths to create awareness.

I would appreciate any help, information and correspondence you can give and hope I can become an active member. I feel lost without my beliefs which I get a lot of stick for. Parents, partners all think its something I'll grow out of but at 35 years old I think there's little chance of that, anyway age doesn't matter in this instance.

I want to play my part in creating a safe environment for my kids to grow up in. I want schools to play their part also, too much p.c. does more harm than good. So lets scrap the Equal Opp's, in the last 30 years they have achieved absolutely nothing; the usual one law for one, one law for another.

Any help would be welcome. Also, could you put me in touch with any other relevant addresses, persons in my local area? I look forward to hearing from you soon, hopefully sooner rather than later.

VERICHIP LAUNCHED IN 'GET CHIPPED' PROMOTION

Applied Digital Solutions Inc, an advanced technology development company, has launched a national 'Get Chipped' promotion for VeriChip, a sub dermal personal verification microchip. The first 100,000 registrants and all qualified ADSX shareholders are eligible for a special introductory saving of $50 at the time of chipping. The announcement came two days after a surprise ruling by the US Food and Drug Administration (FDA) that VeriChip is not a regulated medical device 'for security, financial and personal identification/safety applications'.

VeriChip is able to function as a standalone, tamper proof personal verification technology or it can operate in conjunction with other security technologies such as standard ID badges and advanced biometric devices eg. retina scanners, thumb print readers or face recognition devices. VeriChip can be used as a means for secure access to a range of consumer products such as PC's, laptops, cars, cell phones and even homes and apartments. VeriChip is also expected to provide a solution to the problem of fraudulent access to bank accounts and to the growing crisis of identity theft.

VeriChip is a miniaturised radio frequency identification devise (RFID) that can be used in a variety of security, financial, emergency identifications and health care applications. About the size of a grain of rice, each VeriChip product contains a unique verification number and will be available in several formats, some of which will be insertable under the skin. The verification number is captured by briefly passing a propriety scanner over the VeriChip. A small amount of radio frequency energy passes from the scanner, energising the dormant VeriChip, which then emits a radio frequency signal transmitting the verification number.

A TIP-OFF from the FBI led to a child porn raid at a Greenock flat, the sheriff court heard.

Police found thousands of indecent photographs downloaded from the internet at the house at 56 Lynedoch Street, the court was told.

The flat occupier, former Customs officer James Heeps (30), admitted "making" 2,257 indecent photographs or pseudo photographs of children.

Sheriff John Herald said he had to view a cross section "as a necessity and not from choice".

"They showed, boys, girls, young men and women and even a baby.

"They were disgusting", said the sheriff.

He jailed Heeps for six months telling him: "If it were not for people like you, photographs of this nature would not be taken."

The sheriff said he appreciated that Heeps had not taken the photographs himself or been involved in distribution.

There were shouts of "animal", hissing and booing and "make it six years" from the public benches as Heeps, formerly of 11 Laughton Terrace, East Calder, West Lothian, was led to the cells.

Depute fiscal Maggie Porter told the court earlier that the FBI had passed on Heeps' e-mail address to police who were then able to trace him to the flat.

Bachelor Heeps worked as a tax inspector in Glasgow before moving to Greenock to live and work as a Customs and Excise Officer.

He gave up his job after the raid which happened on 10 October, 2001.

Sheriff Herald ordered that Heeps name be put on the sex offenders' list and forfeited the computer equipment.

Dear Broadsword,

In the past, I have lacked any good hopeful news from my local area, it's a bit of a safe Labour seat. (With Socialist scum in high places). I hope 'the Rose' will find some comfort in the article, although like me she will probably prefer a longer sentence or castration.

BROADSWORD Remembers the BRADFORD RIOTS

The wheels of justice turn very slowly

Two years later and the courts finally deal with the worst of the Asian thugs who turned a city into a battlefield.

As this issue of Broadsword goes to print it is two years since the city of Bradford, in the heart of northern England, was torn apart when thousands of Asians, mostly Pakistani and Kashmiri Muslims, went on a violent rampage of hate and destruction.

Now in the summer of 2003, two years later and hundreds of police man-hours later, the worst of the rioters have finally passed through the courts. Interestingly the courts dealt with those who had fought the Police first, passing sentence on nearly a hundred assorted offenders across 2002, with much media coverage.

Now, with much less media reporting, especially in the national press, the courts have sentenced those who made deliberate and violent assaults on members of Bradford's beleaguered White community.

Not surprisingly the media focus was on the gang of Asian thugs who savagely beat a young White Nationalist and others who surrounded and knifed a lone White youth at the beginning of the disturbances. However less attention was paid to the role of older Asians who led a mob of rioters in a homicidal attack on a pub, where by some miracle no one was killed, but the buildings were totally engulfed in fire. The attack on the Globe pub and Manningham Ward Labour Club in Whetley Hill was one of the worst incidents of the night, the outer doors were blocked by rioters with stolen cars and as elderly White customers fled into the cellars for shelter, fire bombs were thrown into the bar area, the sole intention of the mob was to burn down the building and incinerate the staff and customers. Only the heroic efforts of Bradford fire-fighters made it possible to break into the cellars and rescue the 25 terrified people trapped under the inferno.

Above: July 7th 2001 - Heavily outnumbered White youth Paul Laurie is trapped by a gang of Asian thugs – soon eight of them are involved in beating this one young victim. Mr. Laurie was dropped kicked to the ground where he was repeatedly kicked and his head was repeatedly stamped on.

Right: Medical attention for a lone White youth who was attacked and stabbed twice by Asian thugs as the riots of July 7th 2001 began.

Sentenced in June 2003 for the attack on Paul Laurie in July 2001.

Note – It was revealed during sentencing that Sajid Khan had a previous conviction for racially-aggravated assault but the press have kept this very quiet, a violent, racist Asian does not fit their stereotype that only Whites can be racist. There is little doubt that professional anti-racist publications will not mention this case.

Throughout the two years since the Bradford riots of July 2001, the press have constantly tried to cast blame for the disturbances on the presence of a handful of British Nationalist activists in the city centre on the day. There is ample evidence that gangs of Asian youths had gathered in the centre of Bradford at the invitation of assorted 'anti-racist' organisations and were being whipped up into violence by the rhetoric of speakers and activists from the Anti-Nazi League and Anti-Fascist Action, who were all inciting the crowds to "Smash the Nazis". Of course no police action has been taken against these people for inciting the violence which followed, despite this the Judge at the trial of the gang who attacked Paul Laurie made the legal position clear. Judge Stephen Gullick said, "I fully accept that feelings were running high in the city centre at this time. I fully accept that you found the presence of Paul Laurie, and those with whom he associated objectionable. However, we live in a democratic society where wide ranging views of various types can be expressed within the law."

And "This incident may explain why you all behaved in the wholly unlawful way you did, but it does not excuse it."

A picture that tells it all – hatred on the face of an Asian rioter as he is arrested by riot police.

RADICAL OPINION

It alarmed me to see on the television news the other day that the Royal Society for the Protection of Birds is backing a cull of Ruddy ducks in this country. The purpose of the cull is to wipe out the species completely in the UK because of its migration each year to Spain where it interbreeds with the Spanish White Headed duck. This annual interbreeding is threatening the existence of the White Headed duck which is native to Spain, and the situation is therefore raising concerns with environmental organisations who wish to preserve the species in its purity.

It is obvious by the support offered by such large organisations as the RSPB that there is grave concern so far regarding the existence of the Ruddy duck and a considerable amount of money will be put into employing the services of marksmen to shoot the offending species here in the UK.

From the interest by the environmentalists in the protection of a species of wildlife which isn't even native to this country but that is being threatened by a species that is a resident of the UK, it is obvious that the protection of a species of duck is of great significance, but I cannot help but find a parallel with other situations that are apparent; but not including a species of duck.

If we are to look at life on the whole, all forms are worth preservation. We have seen many species of animal, bird and reptile become extinct over the centuries. The agencies that have been set up worldwide for the preservation and the removal of the threat of the species that exist today, hold a very important position on the world stage.

However, if the right to life is such a fundamental part of our existence as a civilisation today, how then, when any species of animal is put under threat of extinction, is it possible favour one organisation to another?

David Attenborough features in so many television documentaries about the preservation of gorillas and various other species of ape, but evolved from this source (a view on which I have my own opinions) and yet he is apparently not concerned with the threat that is rising to a race of White people worldwide.

I find it increasingly difficult to comprehend the difference between the preservation of a duck which is a native of Spain, and which necessitates our involvement with the total eradication of a species of duck in this country that threatens them, and the similar necessity of organisations trying to promote the preservation of the White race worldwide? Is there a difference? Why should it be possible to openly eradicate one species of duck, but not possible to simply re-introduce another species of human back into its original environment because of its threat to the native species of this country? I would love somebody to help me with the answer to this question.

Because of my belief in the preservation of my White race as a species of a animal, who has a right to a safe, protected life within its natural environment, I am called a 'subversive', a 'criminal' and told that 'I belong behind bars'!!! Watch out David Attenborough, it may be your turn next!!

BRITONS

A warning to the Government and to the media:- STOP ABUSING THE TERM!!!

The term 'Briton' only applies to those who are British by birth and ancestry; not those who are 'British' just because the government has given them a British passport or granted them 'British' nationality.

'British' by bits of paper is not the same thing as being British by blood, heritage and ancestry.

In recent months government statements and media reports have repeatedly referred to individuals as 'Britons' or 'British' who are patently not British by race, ancestry and decent. These individuals hold British passports and perhaps a British Government issued birth certificate but they are not Britons.

A-Z OF NATIONALISM

BRAN THE BLESSED (Bendigeid Vran): Giant son of the Celtic Sea God

'Llyr', Brother of 'Branwen' and half brother to 'Manawydan Fab Llyr'. He was the God of fertility and the patron of craftsmen, harpists, poets and warriors. His name means 'Raven' and although a God and a giant, he was also the mortal King of Britain. His story is told in the 'Mabinogion'.

He gave his sisters hand of marriage to the Irish King 'Matholwch' without the permission of their half brother 'Efnisien'. In retaliation, on the eve of their wedding Efnisien cut the ears, lips and tails off Matholwch's finest horses, which were a gift for Bendigeid Vran. This act almost started a war instantly, but Bendigeid Vran manages to calm the situation by giving Matholwch the 'Cauldron of Rebirth' as compensation. However, when the Irish got home Matholwch's men decided the cauldron was not compensation enough and after Branwen had given their King a son and Heir, they soon denounced her as their Queen and set her to work in the kitchens where she was badly mistreated.

When Bendigeid Vran heard of this news, he and his armies stormed across the Irish Sea in a fit of rage and despite the Irish having the Cauldron, Bendigeid Vran and his armies still triumphed in what was the bloodiest battle either side ever saw. When all had calmed, Bendigeid Vran's men had slain every single Irish being in Ireland, except five pregnant women who hid in a cave. And out of all of Bendigeid Vran's armies only seven warriors remained, he himself being mortally wounded by a poison dart during the battle. His last order to his men was to cut off his head and bury it pointing towards Europe under the 'White Mount' in London to protect Britain from invaders. The 'White Mount' is now the White Tower and as the saying goes; "If the Ravens leave the Tower of London the White Tower will fall to ruin and Britain shall fall to invaders"

BRANWEN: Daughter of 'Llyr' and sister to 'Bran the Blessed' and half sister to 'Efnisien' and 'Nisien'. Her tale is one of the main stories in the 'Mabinogion'. After seeing the destruction of the battle, Branwen died of a broken heart. The seven survivors (Glifew, Gruddieu, Heilyn, Manawydan Fab Llyr, Pryderi, Taliesin and Ynawag) brought her body back to Wales and buried her at what is now known as 'Bedd Branwen' on 'Anglesey'.

CERBERUS: Three headed dog-like monster who guarded the Greek Underworld and stopped anyone trying to leave. The offspring of 'Typhon' and 'Echidna', brother to 'The Hydra' and 'The Chimaera' and possibly 'The Sphinx'. Cerberus was so terrible to look at, that anyone who dared was turned to stone.

CERIDWEN (Carridwen): Corn and Fertility Goddess of Celtic Mythology. She was the wife of 'Tegid Voel' and the mother to the most beautiful girl ever to be born 'Crearwy'. The ugliest man in the world 'Afaidd', her ugly son, was a great warrior and fought with King Arthur at Camlann, 'Morfran Ab Tegid' (Sir Morvan) and the beautiful poet, Bard Taliesin' (who's name means Radiant Brow).

She was also the keeper of the 'Cauldron of the Otherworld', the vessel in which divine knowledge and inspiration are brewed. Ceridwen's name means 'White Grain' and in some tales is called 'Hen Wen' or 'Old White One', she was the pig who gave birth to several monsters who, according to tradition, would cause Britain untold troubles. One of the monsters was 'Cath Pulug'. She is always the crone figure and is one of the most important characters in Celtic Mythology. Often portrayed as the evil old witch, her role is more of a teacher teaching harsh lessons, than one of mischief and malice. Her story is one that must be studied hard to be fully understood, but is an essential read for anyone who is interested in our history.

CERNUNNOS: The 'Horned One'. Lord of animals and God of hunting, culling and taking. His worship was so widespread that he was probably the closest the Celts got to an 'All Father' God. He is depicted as having a great pair of antlers, wearing a sleeveless tunic and sitting crossed legged whilst being surrounded by wild animals. In later attempts to revive the religion he is a Fertility God, in ancient times his job was to purify by collection and sacrifice. In later times he was the Spirit of the Forest or Home the Hunter.

BUILDING AN N.S. FUTURE

RITUAL KILLINGS!

PUT AN END TO THE CRUELTY OF RITUAL SLAUGHTER

Every year in Britain hundreds of thousands of animals have their throats slit without pre-stunning in the name of Religion. This happens every day in Asian and Jewish run abattoirs across the country and in the EU in order to produce pure Halal or kosher meat. When the Muslim celebration of Eid al-Adha takes place in March every year, thousands of sheep are ritually slaughtered during the four-day feast, many of the animals suffering brutal treatment before the actual slaughter takes place.

Although Switzerland ruled this barbaric practice illegal since 1893, this cruel act is completely legal in Britain and the EU for one simple reason :- because it has been declared in the name of Religion; Islamic and Jewish Religion. And so not to offend our Middle-Eastern invaders, no ruling has been passed to put an end to this terrible brutality.

Ritual or Religious slaughter involves the animal being forcibly held down and then having its throat slit whilst it is completely conscious until the animal bleeds to death. Muslim followers believe that this is absolutely necessary in order to adhere to scriptural procedures.

During the process of a ritual slaughter the animal is dragged by its hind legs to a makeshift wooden cradle or just forcibly held down. Then it has its throat cut. It is often the case that untrained slaughterers hack away at the animal's throat using a blunt knife which frequently takes several attempts leaving the poor animal in absolute agony. Then it is thrown to the ground, convulsing for as long as 7 - 10 minutes until it bleeds to death, whilst the slaughterer carries on with the killing of the next poor animal.

This is indeed a horrific brutality, as many slaughters occur in dirty back yards as opposed to the EU law stating that the ritual killing must, without exception, take place inside a licensed abattoir.

The UK frequently exports animals to the Middle East to be killed using ritual slaughter methods. "The animal is slaughtered whilst hanging in the air suspended by its hind legs. It must be forced to remain completely still during the time of slaughter. To render it incapable of movement, a rope is attached to one of its front legs, and then tied securely to the wall by means of a pulley and hooks whilst the head is made secure and immobile. A plier with an iron hook at either end is inserted into the animal's nostrils and tightened. The plier is then pulled and secured onto the opposite wall so that the front leg is pulled to one wall, whilst the head, with the help of the hooks, is pulled to the other. Thus subjecting the animal to the most excruciating pain imaginable. The animal generally screams and bellows with the agonising pain until the slaughterer slits its throat. (Excerpts from a shochet's report, Jewish Press).

You may unwittingly be purchasing ritually slaughtered meat products because the hindquarters are never used and they are therefore sold on the open market. Ending up on the shelves of your local supermarket, completely unmarked of its ritually slaughtered origins.

What the religious scholars say-

"There is in fact no sentence in the Bible, and no injunction in the Talmudical treatise on slaughtering against first making the animal unconscious. We are united against the slaughter of conscious animals. We consider it a horror in itself and an abomination when coupled with the vicious devices used to restrain conscious livestock. We have nothing to gain, neither on earth nor in heaven, by slaughtering God's creatures whilst they are conscious." - Rabbi Dr. Eugene Kullman

Chief Kadhi of Kenya, which has a significant Muslim population stated:-

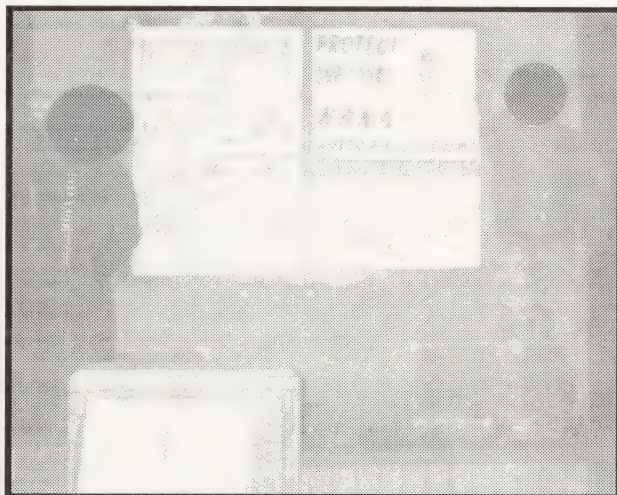

"Stunning and animal.... Before it is slayed for the food of man is not all against Muslim religion. Stunning is a kind act which renders the animal unconscious and insensible to pain, so that it does not suffer the pain of being slayed. Stunning does not kill the animal and does not prevent it from bleeding when it is slayed from the cutting of the throat.

Next time you consider eating authentic Jewish or Asian food, bear in mind the suffering of those animals who have become part of the dish in front of you.

LETTERS to the EDITOR

Dear Editor,

Why do black people feel the need to keep on accusing the different police forces working in Great Britain of racism?

The police are no way at all in the wrong to stop and search more black people because the vast majority of street crime is carried out by black people.

How much longer have the White people of Great Britain got to put up with this nonsense?

Enough is Enough!!!
Repatriation Now!!!
For Race and Nation!!!

Kent N.S.

Dears Sirs/Madam,

I am writing this letter to you so that you can help me. I have your advertisements about the British Movement and how we, the White British Anglo-Saxon, race must secure the existence of our people and a future for our white children.

I myself come from a British Military background like all my forefathers before me. I served in the British Army for over 16 years and I love Great Britain and the White British race of ours. I would die for this great country of ours right now! I used to be a Tory Party member, but I now know that they do not care about this great country or her White British people. All they want is our vote at election time and then they disappear again.

I want to join a party that puts Britain and her Native people first!

Please would you very kindly send me as much information as you can about the British Movement, about what you believe in and your views etc.

I would like to help you as much as I possibly can.

Thank you very much.

Yours Faithfully

Ian .M.

MOBILE PHONE RADAR SYSTEM WILL TRACK OUR EVERY MOVE

The government is funding secret radar technology that will allow the biggest ever extension of "Big Brother" style surveillance in the UK. The radical new system, which has outraged civil liberties groups, uses mobile phone masts to allow security authorities to watch vehicles and individuals in 'real time' almost everywhere in Britain.

The technology 'sees' the shapes made when radio waves emitted by mobile phone masts meet an obstruction. The receiver filters out signals bounced back by immobile objects, such as walls or trees. This allows anything moving, such as cars or people to be tracked. Previously, radar needed massive fixed equipment to work and transmissions from mobile phone masts were thought too weak to be useful.

The system works wherever a mobile phone can pick up a signal. By using receivers attached to mobile phone masts, users of the new technology could focus in on areas hundreds of miles away and bring up a display showing moving vehicles or people. An individual with one type of receiver, a portable unit little bigger than a laptop computer, could even use it as a 'personal radar' covering the area around the user.

THE EDITOR SAYS:

Thank you all for taking the time to write to us here at the Broadword. We value your comments, news & views. So keep those letters coming!!!

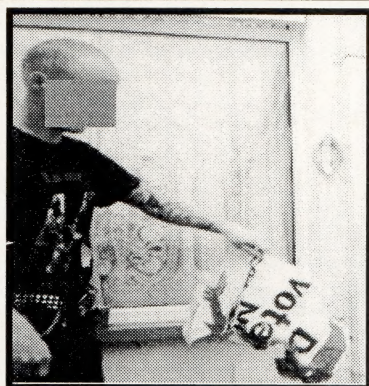

Researcher are working on giving the new equipment 'X-ray vision', the capabilities to see through walls and into peoples homes. UK Ministry of Defence officials are hoping to introduce the system as soon as resources allow.

Police and security services are known to be interested in a variety of possible surveillance applications. The researchers themselves say the system, known as Cellidar, is aimed at anti-terrorism defence, security and road traffic management.

DONATIONS NEEDED

BRITISH MOVEMENT NEEDS MONEY

It was recently stated by a leading British Movement activist that there is one thing that the BM has always been bad at, and that is asking for money!

So to change all that, we are seeking donations, no matter how small. Every penny given is a victory.

Radical political organisations seeking to build a counter-culture are never popular with the mainstream financial bankers who bank-rol mainstream political parties (a number of them are those on the so-called revolutionary Left).

The National Socialist revolution that British Movement seeks to create will build up on the cash handouts and donations of ordinary British men and women, the small change of a Nation will fund our campaigns, not the bankers and multi-millionaires. British Movement is an organisation of the grass roots.

So if you support what the British Movement is doing and want to do more, or if you support the BM but wish to remain unconnected, please support us with cash.
